New School Broadcasts
Producer — Bert Mayes

Bert Mayes

Bert Mayes, a member of a well-known Manitoba teaching family, has been appointed School Broadcasts Organizer for the CBC prairie region, replacing Fred Laight, who has taken up a similar position at CBC Vancouver.

For 40 years children in at least 18 Manitoba towns have been taught by a Mr. Mayes or a Miss Mayes. The family has been represented at various times by at least one of its teaching members (the father, both sons and both daughters) in Carberry, Lyleton, Goodlands, Medora, Birtle, Oakner, Stockton, Eden, Hazelridge, Graysville, Flin Flon, Ninga, Rossburn, Deloraine, Winnipeg, Foxwarren, Minnedosa, and Camp Shilo. The older son, Carlyle, is now a high school teacher in Edmonton.

Bert Mayes was born in Deloraine in 1927, and received his early education in Birtle, Lyleton, and Melita. Following his graduation from United College (B.A. 1947), he taught high school for a year at Deloraine, then returned to his own studies for a year, majoring in French at the University of Manitoba.

For two years (1949-50, and 1950-51) Mr. Mayes taught French at United College. Then in 1951 he went to France to study at the Sorbonne on a French government bursary. During his year's study in Paris he received the Certificat d'aptitude à l'enseignement du française from the Sorbonne, and a diploma from the Institut Phonétique of the University of Paris. After touring Europe ("chiefly England, France and Italy"), he returned to Manitoba to teach high school, first in his native Deloraine, later in Flin Flon.

Mr. Mayes joined CBC at Winnipeg in March 1954 as an announcer, and in October 1955 he became producer at the CBC's Edmonton studios. During his four years in Edmonton he has produced school broadcasts, talks, religious programs, outside broadcasts, musical programs, news features, and special programs for the CBC International Service and the CBC French network.

Mr. Mayes says he is enthusiastic about his new work both because it gives him an opportunity to combine his experience in education and broadcasting and because it will include some work in a new field which interests him greatly—educational television (see story this page).

His outside interests include music (he plays the 'cello), languages (he "dabbles" in Spanish, Ukrainian, and German), and curling. He is married (to a teacher!) and is the father of a two-year-old girl.

CBC-TV In The Classroom

The CBC has accepted a recommendation made by the National Advisory Council on School Broadcasting in the fall of 1958 to produce a series of 13 half-hour telecasts during January-April, 1960. Previously, seven of the ten provincial departments of education had approved the recommendation while the Canadian Teachers' Federation and other educational bodies have endorsed the proposal.

The CBC will start the series on Wednesday, January 6. The subjects, treatment and grade level have been planned by the National Advisory Council and the details

Break with Barris

Behind the scenes of CBC-TV's "Swing Easy"

THE SWING EASY cast had a 15-minute break from rehearsal but you would never have known it. The Rhythm Pals stood in the hot Sumach street rehearsal studios singing Ol' Man River, just three feet away from Ruth Walker singing Can't Help Lovin' that Man of Mine. The rehearsal pianist contributed to this all-at-once medley by thumping out something for the two pretty dancers rehearsing their intricate steps.

"He can make that piano talk," said bandleader Bill Richards. "Listen to it say 'ouch'."

Producer Syd Wayne, stand-in for regular producer Bob Jarvis, now on holidays, seemed oblivious to the noise.

"We're a low budget, half hour musical followed by the hour-long Perry Presents," said Wayne. "That means we can't compete with them in big production numbers so we try to build up the personalities on Swing Easy in a friendly, unpretentious way. You could say we're a showcase for younger talent who haven't yet had their own winter series."

He turned to discuss a point of timing with script assistant Rena Krawagna. So we went off to find Swing Easy's writer, Alex Barris. We found him sitting with the shows' Alan Millar. We asked what writers do on a musical show.

"Well, we have quite a lot of spoken dialogue on Swing Easy," Barris said. "In that we differ from many variety shows whose most popular spoken words are usually 'but first . . . and now.' In addition to writing the actual dialogue, the writer sits in on the production meetings as an idea man for the different numbers and attends rehearsals for any changes in the script."

Transitions from one number to the next are also an important part of the writer's job. And this involves more than writing "but first . . . and now." For instance, a camera movement from, say, Alan Millar to Bill Richards, must be motivated, there must be a reason for the move. Barris illustrated this when Syd Wayne came in a few minutes later.

"Syd, why don't we open this bit on Alan here holding Bill's violin. He pretends he's going to play it, then hands it across to Bill," said Barris, thinking of the transition from Camera 1 to Camera 2. Then the Barris love of gags showed a little. "We could have Alan throw the violin. Camera 1 shows Alan throwing the violin to Bill and Camera 2 shows Bill catching a double bass. Have we got a prop double bass?"

Alex Barris, of course, has been a TV variety star on his own show, he is currently writing for TV, and he has been a TV columnist for many years. How does he feel about about Canadian variety?

"Biggest single thing we need now is more rehearsal time," he said. "I think many of our shows are good, but not as good as they might be. Take a singer who has to learn a song's words and melody, then learn the song as played by the orchestra which makes it sound very different than when played on a piano." Bill Richards took this remark with no comment. "Then he has to learn cues. Then dialogue. Then camera movements, and if it's a girl, perhaps some dance steps. All these things other than the actual singing of the number should be so thoroughly learned that the singer can concentrate on the actual song. And this takes rehearsal. That's why Perry Como and Dinah Shore—who would much rather be out playing golf or something—rehearse all week for their shows."

Barris looked at his watch. "Talking about rehearsals—time we got back to the studio." And he and Millar headed back to the studio, to what seemed to us a chaos of music and discussion and kibitzing and talk about transitions with no but-first-and-nows.

Under the harsh glare of man-made lights the official marks a first down. This Saturday night's telecast also marks several firsts in football in Western Canada. When the Winnipeg Blue Bombers clash with the British Columbia Lions Saturday night it'll be not only the first W.I.F.U. league game televised this year, but also the first night game ever televised in the Conference.

A natural rivalry has sprung up between the Lions and Bombers this year because of the relationship between the team's coaches Bud Grant and Wayne Robinson. Longtime friends, Grant and Robinson played together as collegians with Minnesota's Golden Gophers in that team's better years and as professionals with the Philadelphia Eagles. When Grant became a head coach at Winnipeg his first move was to bring in Robinson as line coach. Together they built a Grey Cup Champion. Now as B.C.'s coach Robinson would like nothing better than to destroy the "monster" he helped to create.

An interesting note on the game is that the Bombers have never yet lost a game in Empire Stadium, but have won twelve, including one for last year's Grey Cup.

The game will be carried on all connected CBC network and affiliated stations in Western Canada with the exception of CBUT-Vancouver, which will be blacked out. The play-by-play commentary will be by Ted Reynolds.

Sunday on radio

Sheridan's "The Rivals"

Adapted by Lister Sinclair

It had been advertised as a comedy of love and intrigue, and the cream of London's theatre-going crowd was there, with silks and satins rustling anticipatorily in the stalls. No one knew much about the young author, or what he had in store for them. The curtain rose on a lively gallery of figures destined for fame. Mrs. Malaprop stepped into her unique place in the English language, capturing even the toughest critics with her delightful misuse of words. And with her came Bob Acres, a lovable but captious country squire trying to behave like a gentleman, and romantic Lydia Languish, awirl in a world coloured by the nonsense she picked up in current novels. When the curtain fell on the last laugh the audience was divided. Some heralded a writer of importance, Others . . . and they were those with the loudest voices . . . felt that one of the characters, Sir Lucius O'Trigger, had been insulting to the Irish. That would never do, and the author immediately modified the script, shortened the play and livened up the dialogue. The next night the play was an enormous success, and Richard Brinsley Butler Sheridan was made, with his first important play, The Rivals. Producer's Choice presents it this Sunday night on CBC radio in an adaptation by Lister Sinclair, with Peter Francis as guest producer. Mr. Francis is an executive producer of CBC-TV drama department.

Modern fledgling playwrights in baggy corduroys who exist for years on little more than coffee and cigarettes borrowed from other playwrights, and when not bending over reluctant typewriters are hammering hopelessly on producers' doors, have reason to be envious of Sheridan. At 22 he had a solid reputation as a writer, a beautiful, talented young wife, a fine home, and an income that would shortly rise to 10,000 pounds a year. That was in 1775. The following year his School for Scandal made him a celebrity. Although his plots and characters were conventional, he "poured new wine into old bottles" with wit and humor that are as timely today as then.

He inherited his writing talent from his mother, a novelist and dramatist, and his dramatic bent from his father, an actor and theatre manager. Sheridan was born in Dublin in 1751, joined his parents in London when he was nine, and never again saw Ireland. After six years at Harrow he began to write, but nothing startling enough to catch a producer's eye. Before he was 21 he eloped to France with Elizabeth Anne Linley, beautiful 16-year-old daughter of the well-known composer. The idea of the runaway was to help her enter a nunnery to escape the attentions of a cad by the name of Major Matthews. She and Sheridan were secretly married in Calais, but it wasn't long until the two irate fathers hauled the couple home and called the whole thing off. The young husband then fought two duels with the still insistent Major, in the second of which Sheridan was badly wounded, and as an antidote his father sent him off to study maths in the country. But love triumphed, and he and Elizabeth were married again. They had no income but set themselves up grandly in London, and within the year The Rivals was produced. In 1776 Sheridan succeeded Garrick as manager of Britain's most famous old theatre, the Drury Lane, and shortly after became part owner and its life-long promoter.

In 1780 Sheridan was launched on a parliamentary career that lasted 33 years. He was a strong

TV and Education

By BRIAN STEWART

(Last of three articles on children's television)

"Television has a definite value as a teaching aid in the school classroom." The statement comes from a report (on experimental school broadcasts on CBC-TV) prepared by the National Advisory Council on Schools Broadcasting. Other experiments in the United States and Britain almost always confirm this view. (See page 2 for details of further CBC-TV educational experiments.)

Let's say immediately that TV will not likely reduce the importance of the teacher in our classroom, not even when school rooms are fitted with two-way sound so pupils can ask questions of the TV teacher and get back answers, or when each school has its own videotape to record and playback programs at convenient times. But as a teaching aid it has great advantages: perhaps most of all it lets pupils see and hear things of which previously they could only read.

First, television can bring experts in their fields or great artists right into the classroom. A Pittsburgh experiment had Robert Frost reading his own poetry for forty minutes to twenty school rooms. "Mr. Frost would have needed a week to visit all twenty school rooms personally," says the report on the experiment.

Secondly, science programs can use laboratory apparatus, specimens and visual aids that are not available to individual schools or only so at great expense. The TV close-up will often enable students to see a teacher's experiment better than if it were done in the classroom.

Thirdly, subjects like history and English can be dramatized very effectively or given "actuality" treatment. For instance, the second CBC-TV schools experiment in 1956 took viewers back to Charlottetown, P.E.I., in 1864 and dramatized the events leading up to Federation, "interviewing" government officials, and the man-on-the-street for their opinions on Federation.

Fourthly, with the minimum of fuss the TV set can take students to museums, art galleries, zoos, to famous historic places and to industrial plants. One program in the first Canadian experiment took pupils to the Quebec-Labrador border to see developments of the iron ore deposits there while the 1960 telecasts will show them such famous places as the scene of Simon Fraser's descent down the Fraser River.

Fifthly, television can give a vivid treatment of national and international affairs.

All these and other factors make educational television immensely stimulating, not only to the pupil but also to the teacher. Television's use of top-flight lectures enables classroom teachers to measure and if necessary sharpen their techniques in what is essentially a lonely profession.

Again when TV takes over, the classroom teacher has time to observe students and attend to individual needs. And, in those cases when the TV teacher gives the whole lesson, the classroom teacher has that much more time to prepare other lessons. This is of particular advantage in the U.S. with its acute shortage of well-trained teachers.

Television also has the great virtue of bridging the gulf between school and home. And parents can both gain a greater understanding of what their children are being taught and also learn a great deal themselves. In this respect, "semi-educational" programs like the current Two for Physics have a very important role.

Film in the classroom, of course, has some of the advantages of TV, and some of its own; for instance, film can be used when required by the school teacher whereas TV (at the moment) is limited to the time of broadcast. But film has disadvantages too. For one thing, it seems technically more difficult to give a whole lesson or course of lessons on film than on TV. Again, films are time- and space-bound. On TV a master-teacher can allude to the morning's paper or introduce a visitor to town or show on the screen some of the children's own work, say paintings, from yesterday's lessons, this last being a very effective stimulus. Nor must we forget that films can be shown on TV.

The great defect of television—particularly when it attempts to give a full lesson—is the loss of that subtle two-way communication between teacher and pupil. This will no doubt always restrict the uses of TV. But within certain limits television can be tremendously stimulating (along with books, films and the usual classof each program are being worked out by the School Broadcasts Department of the CBC in consultation with special committees of teachers. A teachers' guide will be available in the fall.

CBC-TV IN CLASSROOM

Following are four of the suggested programs:

Rhythm and Melody (Grades 2-3): taking advantage of children's natural feeling for rhythm as expressed in their games, these four programs introduce children to the idea of rhythm in music. Each program will include participation by the children in the classroom, and will progress from simple clapping to creative rhythmic activities linked with singing.

Science About Us (Grades 4-6): Why? How? These two questions strike the note of enquiry underlying the series designed to develop curiosity in the world around us. Programs will deal with science in nature and science as applied by man. It will include such topics as the thunder and lightning storm, electricity about the house, sound and the airplane.

Where History Was Made (Grades 7-9): This series will help Canadian history come alive by enabling students to visit the actual spot where important events took place. Besides showing the sites as they are today, the programs will use museum objects, paintings, drawings and other material. Topics will include Huronian and the Jesuit Martyrs (1649), The Battle of the Plains of Abraham (1759), Simon Fraser's Descent of the Fraser (1808).

Child Life in Other Lands (Grades 2-3): Children and adults from other lands will tell of their way of life, illustrating their descriptions with songs, games, and a variety of everyday articles. This series of four 15-minute programs will be produced at CBC Winnipeg under the supervision of the new School Broadcasts Organizer for the CBC prairie region, Bert Mayes (see story page 2).

THE RIVALS

Whig and one of the most brilliant orators of his day, prominent in the impeachment of Warren Hastings. Hand-clapping was heard in the House of Commons for the first time after his first speech against Hastings. At least once he refused a peerage for a change of party. Although the newspapers ridiculed him many times, he fought long and mightily for freedom of the press. Shortly after he gave up his political career he was arrested for debt, and spent a time in debtor's prison . . . the Drury Lane had eaten greedily into his income, and in the custom of the times he had had to pay many of his constituents a healthy bonus to vote for him. But, contrary to some of the stories about him, he was never really destitute. When he died at 64 his funeral was one of the largest and most magnificent ever held in Westminster Abbey . . . a sentimental tribute to a man who had so brilliantly satirized the sentiment of his time.

It cannot be said that the minor planets are popular among astronomers and they have been termed "vermin of the skies," since they cause complications with star-counting and similar work, while to keep a check on their orbits means a great deal of laborious and unrewarding calculation. However, they have an interest of their own, and they may well prove to be really significant in connection with the origin of the solar system in which we live. — Patrick Moore, on BBC.

This MondayTwo Years of TV
In Medicine Hat

By NORMA THOMPSON

Two up and many, many more to go, is the boast at CHAT-TV in Medicine Hat, Alberta, as September 14 marks the second anniversary of this station on the air. When an anniversary is celebrated it is perfectly natural to reminisce, recalling lessons learned, problems overcome and new techniques acquired—progress in so many ways.

From CHAT-TV's modern quarters, atop a knoll, six miles west of the city, in the townsite of Redcliff, emits twelve hours daily of pleasurable telecasting, from an air-conditioned 1,386 square foot control room and 43,200 cubic foot studio.

Almost every one of the 20 employees can "double" in the control room or studio. General manager R. J. "Bob" Buss divides his time between radio and television as manager and vice-president of the Monarch Broadcasting Company. Other members of the original staff are Sid Gaffney, technical director and his assistant, Hugh Mitchell. Jack Oldham on sales and Dick Breakell doing booth and live commercials are both hard-working assets to our station. Still another important twosome among the veterans within the confines of CHAT-TV are the identical twins, Dan and Reg McGuire, honour graduates of Ryerson College. Bob Burns and Roland "Slim" Cook do news and sportscasts on both radio and television.

"Live" productions emanating from the 43,200 cubic foot studio include Eyes on Sports, a panel show, with "Slim" Cook as moderator, and View the Clue where the television audience tries to identify a mystery object, only a part of which is shown on the TV screen.

RIVERBOAT STARS—Darren McGavin (left) plays the role of Grey Holden, tough captain of the sternwheeler Enterprise, on the new action-packed film series "Riverboat," Monday nights on CBC-TV. Burt Reynolds (right) is cast as a river pilot.

The Jon Thibert Show, prepared by Jon Thibert, a veteran broadcaster, presents interesting interviews, each Wednesday. In addition interviews with local and visiting dignitaries are presented by Norma Thompson, hostess of Guest in the House, each Monday. The Bulletin Board, a ten minute resume each Friday informs viewers of forthcoming events ably conducted by Tom Gunter, who is also a salesman. The live-it-up, Sock Hop, emceed by Doug Burgess, and heard Saturday afternoons, is timely entertainment for the teenagers. Our cameraman, creative young Gary Buss, can make the single camera do the work of two.

Peter Soehn and Pat Potter are art and photographic directors respectively. Employing their mastery of commercial art, photography and graphics they create the most imaginative productions, both still and animated.

Other members of CHAT's spirited team are Elta Strouts, traffic manager; Joanne Halliday, stenoreceptionist; Al Gaspodar, sales; Cliff Dacre, production co-ordinator; Frank Peters, engineer; Ed Geisinger, photographer; and newcomers Bruce Hoekstra and Al Hoeft, in the control room.

Two years of technical and artistic progress are behind us. We look forward to a bright future, serving our 11,400 television homes with the latest world news, the top entertainment and informative programs, and valuable commercial messages.

room techniques) to pupils and teachers—and parents.

The same may be said of all TV. In fact, as we implied in last week's article, all television is educational in the broad sense that it helps to mould a child's outlook. If educationists forget that their TV programs must entertain if they are to instruct, or if "commercial" TV programmers forget that their programs have important psychological and sociological effects, and hence are educative in the broad sense, then neither party will be making the most sensible use of the medium.

(Note: This last article in the series owes much to TV and Our School Crisis by Charles A. Seipmann. Data about the language of the Trobriand Islands in last week's article comes from Lineal and Non-Lineal Codifications of Reality by Dorothy Lee, printed in Explorations, March, 1957.)

London Letter

by DR. BOYD NEEL

Dr. Boyd Neel, Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto, is spending the summer in England. Before he left he promised to keep us posted on the musical scene on that side of the Atlantic. In this fourth of his "London Letters" he talks about the annual Promenade Concerts performed in Albert Hall.

The Promenade Concerts, whatever their faults and they are not many, do certainly bring a whiff of fresh air into the London concert world. The tragedy is that they have to be held in the Albert Hall, probably the worst auditorium, from the point of view of acoustics, on the face of this earth. The concerts, however, are run by the BBC and, strangely enough, from a broadcasting point of view, the Albert Hall is excellent. Heard over the air, it is hard to realize the agonies that are being undergone by those in the hall. Yet there are always thousands who cheerfully undergo this annual martyrdom and appear to like it.

Every year there is the usual criticism of the programs. Too many classics. Not enough 18th century. Where are the modern works? Why not more choral music? Why the same old soloists year after year? But as Mr. Johnstone, the BBC Director of Music, says in his foreword to the programs, the whole scheme, even as it stands, takes "... the constructional and selective ability of three experienced music operators for not less than 30 working days, plus a good deal of individual thinking, over a period of three months." Forty-nine consecutive concerts have to be planned with various orchestras, conductors and soloists. Programs have to be arranged so that a certain amount of each can be broadcast on several different wave lengths. It is indeed a mammoth undertaking and the wonder is that the final results are so successful.

As to the programs, Sir Henry Wood's tradition of breaking new ground must always be borne in mind. On the other hand, the concerts have rightly become a kind of "Everyman's Edition of Music" and it is at the Proms that many a student heard the great classics for the first time, and during the eight weeks, he can get a very good idea of the basic orchestral repertoire of the world's finest music.

Again, young and promising soloists have to be given a chance of an important public appearance, yet, at the same time the audience insists on hearing its old favourites year after year, very often in the same works. The BBC cannot ignore the box office attractions of the international star artist because the concerts have to be made a financial success. In the concert world a "financial success" does not, of course, necessarily mean that a profit is made. The usual object in concert giving anywhere is to make the inevitable loss as small as possible!

But, taken as a whole, the concerts are a real tonic after the appalling stagnation of the dreary round which we find at the Festival Hall. As one critic of a leading paper here has well put it: "Those still tempted to find fault with the Prom programs should be sentenced to nightly attendance at the Festival Hall throughout the winter season, where a visitor from Mars might be forgiven for assuming that the planet called Earth had given birth to only a couple of dozen or so playable compositions."

As I see it, one of the chief causes of the state of the concert world here is the fact that there are no "subscription series" of any orchestral concerts in London like is both an asset and a threat to man. Dr. Patterson Hume and Dr. Donald Ivey devote this week's program to a discussion of decaying atoms. From Toronto.

From Baffin Island to Studio Seven

THEY watched the "shadowbox" with fascination, they envied the accordionist on the Joan Fairfax Show her instrument, they heard their own voices on tape, they decided to try tap dancing themselves when they got home, and they kissed Joyce Davidson in the traditional Eskimo fashion.

"They've seen so much they can say nothing right now — they're dumbfounded—but when they get home they'll have enough to talk about for a year."

John David Ford was interpreting for Kiawak, 25-year-old, and Eeyeevadluk, five years older. The two Eskimos were visiting southern Ontario from their home on Cape Dorset on the southwestern end of Baffin Island. There they hunt seal and white fox, paddle kayaks, live in snow houses, and generally live the life Eskimos are traditionally supposed to live. This was their first trip to the "outside."

"They have never seen such an elaborate accordion," said Mr. Ford. "They both play accordions but quite simple ones. They like any kind of bright music, just so long as it is lively and bright."

For most of their tour through the CBC-TV studios in Toronto the two men were too fascinated and bewildered to ask many questions. They did want to know who was in charge of Studio 7, full of cameras and technicians and mike booms and pretty girls—only one man? The producer? They wondered that one man could control such apparent confusion. (That's something producers sometimes wonder about too.)

Translator Ford, who speaks eight Eskimo dialects to his Eskimo companions' one, seemed to find no difficulty translating into Eskimo when telling about the studio activities.

"We sat down beforehand," he explained, "and worked out names for a number of things so they can talk about them back home. 'Shadowbox' for the TV set, for instance; and that big spotlight shining on Miss Fairfax I called 'sunlight' which is yellow light."

The two Eskimos have recently been at the Stratford Shakespearean Festival illustrating their method of soapstone carving, and its results. On one day 1,250 people saw the two men at work. This activity yields them part of their income at home. The figures are beautiful carvings of people and animals — the two men are among the best Eskimo carvers—made with files, hatchets, knives and sandpaper.

During their CBC visit they were interviewed for radio. How much do they get for a carving? Never over $80, usually around $35 to $40. Such a carving would take at least a week. The art is on the increase and gross exploitation is not now so common.

Kiawak seemed not very impressed by the taste of some of his customers. "Sometimes I make a poor carving and get a high price for it," he said through Mr. Ford. Kiawak has been carving since he was nine years old. His first carving of a mother and child sold for $9.

At Stratford they saw Othello three times. "I had to explain the story the first time," said Mr. Ford. "But second time round they were telling me what was going to happen next. They were shocked when Othello slapped Desdemona. 'We wouldn't do that,' they said. In fact, I had to keep reminding them it was make-believe. I think they enjoyed Orpheus in the Under- world even more than Othello, particularly the costumes."

During the Royal Visit to Stratford, the Queen and Prince Philip talked with Kiawak and Eeyevedluk for several minutes. They found that "Kiawak" means "short bite" (Kiawak is not a tall man) while "Eeyevedluk" means "glittering eye."

Interpreter Ford was born in Fort Chimo, Ungava Bay. Later he moved to Baffin Island and spent many years in the North, learning his eight Eskimo dialects. He now lives in Port Hope, Ont., where he operates an insurance business though the Federal government often calls on him to act as interpreter. Last November he published his first book, Feast of the Midnight Sun. Other manuscripts will be published later.

there are in all other cities the world over. All the numerous orchestras give only "hit or miss" concerts from time to time. There is no planning of a "season" with selling of subscriptions which enables the concert-givers to budget ahead. Nobody has any idea of what any particular concert will bring forth. Hence the abject fear of playing anything outside the hackneyed round of the few "pot boilers" which are known always to draw some sort of an audience. It is a sorry state of affairs in a great city which should have such a vital musical life.

Thursday on "Explorations"

Science and Athletics

First of two programs on the physiology of man

Doug Maxwell

AS the pace of life increases, interest . . . both lay and medical . . . grows in the physical and mental results of stress. Magazines are leaping on the bandwagon with articles on how to avoid stress, and what to do if it catches up with you in the form of a heart attack, a nervous breakdown, a fight with your wife, or any number of minor ailments. And this week Explorations begins a new series of science broadcasts with two programs dealing with the physiology of man, specifically man under stress. (Later in the year Lister Sinclair will return with a series on wild life, and in the spring of 1960 four programs will look at new research in astronomy, geophysics and biology.)

When the human body runs at its peak capability, the physiologist has an opportunity to study its functions at the limit and to make comparisons with its performance of more routine tasks. For the purpose of these programs, which describe physiology as a science and show some of the ways in which it undertakes research, the man under stress is the competitive athlete. Writer and narrator is CBC sportscaster Doug Maxwell. The physiologist explaining the science is Dr. John Fletcher, senior science officer at the Defense Research Medical Laboratories in Downsview, Ontario. For many years Dr. Fletcher has been interested in athletics as competitor and scientist, and was part of the team of medical scientists who analyzed athletic performance at the British Empire Games in Cardiff in 1958.

One event, the four-minute mile, puts an athlete under the most severe stress, the sort physiologists can break down into measurements of heart, lung, muscle and anatomical functioning. In the September 17 program Roger Bannister, first four-minute-miler, tells the story of how he ran and how he trained. With Dr. John Fletcher he will show how he brought all body functions to bear on winning the Miracle Mile in Vancouver in 1954, and will discuss the area and limits of physiology. "Record-breaking," he says, "is really the ability to take an overdraft on your strength. I always felt that all I needed to break through the four-minute barrier was to run the first three-quarters in three minutes. Then . . . provided conditions were right . . . nervous excitement alone would carry me the final quarter in less than sixty seconds." Now he's Dr. Bannister, a resident at the National Hospital, Queen's Square, London, with a keen interest in the physiology of athletics. He has always walked a lot and very fast, but now his running is limited mostly to hurrying up and down hospital stairs.

The September 24 broadcast is titled The Body of an Athlete. A new field of physiology is interested in the role that research can play in improving athletic performance. The results are still tentative in many cases, but they point the way to a close working relationship between doctor and athlete. In this program Dr. Fletcher suggests how physiological research can improve performance in such events as the high jump, swimming and weightlifting. He also indicates that from the functional point of view, certain physical types are best suited for certain athletic events. Doug Maxwell will test Dr. Fletcher's speculations by presenting three athletes unknown to the physiolo-

Khrushchev at U.N.

Half-hour "live" telecast from NBC of Premier Khrushchev's address to the United Nations.

Discovery

This week — "More Ways Than One." There are more ways than one for a living creature to function and get a living. Mary Lela Grimes takes some examples from the Brookfield Zoo reptile house—an egg-eating snake, a matamata turtle, iguana lizard, and a gharial, a strange needle-nosed version of the crocodile. Young viewers will see how the egg-eating snake of Africa can swallow an egg many times his size.

Suspicion

This week—"Lord Arthur Swailes' Crime," adapted by Francis Cockrell from a story by Oscar Wilde. The prophecy of a crafty palmist prompts a mild mannered gentleman to attempt to commit murder. The would-be assassin finds that killing someone isn't easy and his first few attempts end in failure. Cast: Ronald Howard, Rosemary Harris, Gladys Cooper, Mary Forbes, Melville Cooper, Tita Purdom, Sebastina Cabot and Kenrick Huxham.

The Journals and Letters of Fyodor Dostoevski

Novelist, convict in Siberia, soldier, religious enthusiast, traveler, gambler, lover, journalist, amateur psychologist . . . Fyodor Dostoevski was them all and more in his sixty years. And because he was essentially a rather shy and lonely person, he found it easier to communicate his ideas and feelings on paper. Thus his journals and letters stand as a particularly revealing and fascinating portrait of one of the giants of modern literature. David Grey has edited some of the most interesting of them for a CBC Wednesday Night broadcast this week, on CBC radio.

Dostoevsky was born in Moscow in 1821 of a hospital physician who was murdered by the peasants at his country home when his famous son was only 18. The year before Dostoevsky had been enrolled at a military engineering school in St. Petersburg where, to relieve the boredom of technical studies he began writing fiction and poetry.

At 23 he resigned an army commission to devote his full time to writing, and two years later published his first novel . . . Poor Folk, which was widely acclaimed, but his second novel, which appeared the same year, disappointed the critics. Over the next three years he wrote twelve short stories and sketches and an unfinished novel, in all of which the characteristics of his great future novels were evident . . . deep sympathy with the oppressed and a great interest in morbid psychology. He joined a group of young men, the Petrashevski Circle, who met to discuss social and political reforms until the government of Nicholas I got wind of them and had many of them arrested and sentenced to death.

At the Palace of Execution Dostoevsky stood in front of the firing squad for ten minutes . . . and then was told it was all a joke and his sentence had been commuted to exile in Siberia. Those minutes facilitated . . .

Two For Physics

• In my opinion, Dr. H. L. W. (Mailbag, Sept. 6-12), doesn't know a good thing when he sees one. My friend and I are both ardent watchers of Two For Physics (and Astronomy Today when it was on). Although we are only in Grade 9 we find much value in Two For Physics as we took some of the material in Grade 8. What we did not understand we looked up in the library. You don't have to be a master-mind to understand this program. As for Dr. H. L. W.'s pain in the neck, tell him to try some liniment.—J. R. Radley, Winnipeg.

Music in Miniature

• Just a note of appreciation for your program, Music in Miniature, presented by transcription this Sunday on radio. I was especially interested when the names of those taking part included Lorraine E. DuVal, my niece and namesake, a violinist who frequently takes part in BBC recordings. There are so many talented young Canadians over in London that there must be many of their Canadian relatives who are interested when their names are included in the list of per-

On CBC Wednesday Night

Music by Royal Composers

Music by composers of royal birth from the 12th century to the present will be presented in a two-hour program on CBC Wednesday Night this week, on CBC radio. The broadcast will be introduced by the Earl of Harewood, a cousin of Queen Elizabeth and a prominent figure in the English music world. J. B. McGeachy, distinguished Toronto journalist and broadcaster, will be commentator,

MUSIC ON RADIO

by FRANK HAWORTH

MUSIC and royalty are not associated in our minds, these days—their connection, in fact, is restricted to the formal rendering of God Save the Queen whenever the present incumbent of the royal office stops for more than a minute or two in the course of her travels, a procedure that one can imagine becoming definitely wearisome to the object of its regard. (The erstwhile Prince of Wales, himself a musician of some attainment, is reported as once having grumbled, after enduring innumerable repetitions of it, that they had “surely saved Father enough for one day,” though Father himself, the late King George V, took a considerable interest in his musical salutation, and was known to be critical of performances—and arrangements—of it that he felt to be unsatisfactory.)

But it was not always so. Music was for centuries considered an essential part of royal state—and not merely in its ceremonial function of announcing royal arrivals, by fanfare and anthem. With his royal chapel, his court theatre and opera house, his nightly concerts to pass the royal time away, and and production will be by John Reeves. Many well known Toronto musicians will take part, including Elmer Iseler, who will direct the Festival Singers and conduct a chamber orchestra, soprano Elizabeth Benson Guy, baritone Glenn Gardiner, harpsichordist and organist Douglas Bodle, flutist Nicholas Fiore, the Ron Collier Jazz Quintet, pianist Leo Barkin, violinist Hyman Goodman and others.

John Roberts of the CBC music department has been preparing the royal composers' program since last October. He and many other volunteers have spent countless hours searching through old music libraries, scouring museums and poking into many a private manuscript collection, copying scores and translating ancient music symbols. The result is one of the most interesting and unusual programs the CBC has ever presented. Mr. Roberts says: “When the idea of a royal composer's broadcast first came to me, I was not at all sure a program of this nature could be presented for, although I knew about many royal compositions, very few were available in Toronto. Then I discovered John Reeves had investigated several royal composers and after a discussion with him I went to see CBC music librarian Helmut Kallman, who started the search for royal music. One of our most difficult tasks was unearthing music which, in some cases, had not been performed for 200 years. It's not surprising that some of the works included in the program had to be photographed from original manuscripts in the British Museum and libraries in other countries. Upon arrival in Canada pieces by such kings as Henry V and Henry VIII of England had to be put in the hands of musicologists for trans-scribing into modern notation, and other manuscripts needed to be copied carefully and edited.

“Most of the composers represented are fascinating figures in history. Frederick the Great, for example, was not only a shrewd monarch, but an enthusiastic music lover as well. In addition to playing the flute he found time to compose many works, and part of a symphony and a flute concerto by him will open the main part of the broadcast. Frederick the Great will be followed by Song to Aegir by Kaiser Wilhelm II, an instrumental trio by Princess Amalia of Prussia and a piano trio by Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia, who was a nephew of Frederick the Great and met his death at the Battle of Saalfeld in 1806 at the age of 34. Regarded as the black sheep of the family, Louis Ferdinand must have been a brilliant pianist, for Beethoven regarded his playing highly and even dedicated his Piano Concerto in C minor to the Prince. The program will include commentary by a descendent of Louis Ferdinand . . . Louis Frederick, Prince of Prussia . . . recorded especially for this occasion and one of the Prince's own songs will be heard.

The story of the Battle of the Plains of Abraham

Just 200 years ago the English general, Wolfe, defeated the French general, Montcalm, on the Plains of Abraham, following Wolfe's scaling of the "impregnable" heights. This final campaign for Quebec meant the end of a century of struggle between the British and the French for Canada.

Because of its importance, many myths have grown up round the battle on the Plains of Abraham. People tend to romanticize the events and the participants. On September 13, a CBC radio program titled 1759 will attempt to describe the events as they really took place. Colonel C. P. Stacey, whose book on the capture of Quebec will be published soon, will act as central reporter in this actuality documentary.

"I will mainly be basing my script for this program on Colonel Stacey's book," says scriptwriter Len Peterson. "In it he shoots sky-

TRANS-CANADA MATINEE

Fashions for Winter. While the rest of us were sweltering in the summer's heat, the people in the fashion industry were busily contriving the clothes we will wear in the fall's benignity and the winter's cold. Olive Dickason, women's editor of the Weekly Globe and Mail in Toronto, reports on the results of the designers' handiwork. Mrs. Dickason has received an award from the Canadian fashion industry for her reporting.

They Make Music. Music on the recorder, early court dances in costume, children's concerts—these were some of the activities at the 35th Haslemere Festival in England this summer. Among the chief participants in these activities were Carl Dolmetsch and members of his family. When Barbara Green, Canadian freelance broadcaster, was in England earlier this year, she and her tape-recorder visited the musical Dolmetsches. She shares her visit with Matinee listeners today.

New York and I. Trudy Kassner has lived in Vienna, in New York and in Montreal, her present home. But New York has always been her real home and in this Matinee talk, she explains her feelings for the city of neon lights and concrete canyons.

Daily Features . . . Today's news commentary is by Margaret Prang of Vancouver. Francene Campbell plays some of her favourite records, and excerpts are read from "Northwest of 16," by J. G. MacGregor, adapted for radio by Sally Creighton.

Dr. Gibson reviews what Britain is doing in this matter, and offers suggestions for a livelier recreation program in Canada.

divert the royal entourage, his staff composers (those, alas, were the days!) and musical establishment generally — His Majesty was commonly the most substantial supporter of the art in his vicinity. His Majesty, moreover, occasionally went further still, and entered actively into the business, both as performer and as composer; and in an intriguing program in CBC Wednesday Night this week, an array of distinguished soloists, with the Festival Singers and a group of instrumentalists, will show us how His Majesty could acquit himself in the creative field. Royal composers laid under contribution range from Richard Coeur de Lion and Henry VIII to Victoria's omniscient Albert and the King of Cambodia—said to be a devotee of jazz. (A possibly irrelevant, but haunting thought about royal composers of older regimes, is how awkward the position of the conscientious critic might be, in their domains—when even the mildest suggestion that His Majesty's inspiration had perhaps flagged a little could lead to an indefinite sojourn in one of the more waterlogged of His Majesty's dungeons . . .)

The royal program will be preceded by a demonstration of another facet of musical activity formerly much esteemed and now much neglected. This is the art of improvisation, the public practice of which seems now confined to church organists, filling in gaps in the service, jazz virtuosi in some of their more esoteric rituals, and calypso singers — though I have some personal reasons for believing that the latter's efforts exemplify a kind of spontaneity that demands a certain amount of preparation beforehand. The value of improvisation has been much debated, some dismissing it as a mere musical equivalent of mob oratory, or the stump speech, while others hear in it the direct utterance of prophet and seer. In the days of my youth I heard the celebrated French organists Louis Vierne and Marcel Dupre improvising on themes suggested by the audience—and was more impressed by the brilliance of their technical exploits than by the musical content of their productions. I don't want to pre-judge the matter, however; it may well be that when Greta Krauss, harpsichord; Horace Lapp, piano, and Elie Spivak, violin, extemporise on a theme submitted to them by Sir Ernest MacMillan on Wednesday evening, they will come up with something that will enable us to recapture the delight inspired by famous improvisers of the past. There must, presumably, be something in an art practiced by Bach, Mozart and Beethoven.

Items . . . A Suite for Flute and Strings by Canadian composer Kelsey Jones will be played on CBC Concert Hall on Friday . . . Also on Friday, the afternoon program of the Winnipeg String Orchestra will contain a symphony by William Boyce, 18th century English pioneer of that form . . .

Four years in the salt mines sapped his health and aggravated his tendency for epilepsy, but his experiences there were important in his development as a writer. He abandoned his radical leanings, began reading the New Testament . . . the Bible was the only literature he was allowed . . . and acquired a deeper understanding of things spiritual. He also came to know the common Russian people as never before. After his release he was compelled to serve in the army as a private.

During this period he met his first wife, a crude widow who brought him no happiness, and she returned with him to St. Petersburg under an amnesty of 1859. There he had to depend on his pen for his livelihood, using his prison experiences in many of his novels, including The House of the Dead, which Tolstoy considered his greatest. In 1851 he began publishing his own periodical, Time, which was an immediate success, and, flush with money for the first time, he went abroad. On his return a rather flamboyant article On the Poles brought suppression of his magazine, and he left the country deeply in debt, this time to keep a rendezvous in Paris with Pilina Suslova, a beautiful sample of the new emancipated woman, and to try his luck at the gaming tables in Wiesbaden.

He was unfortunate on both counts and returned to Russia to republish his review under the title of The Epoch. His wife died in 1864 and, writing furiously to pay off his mounting debts, he turned out some of his best novels . . . Crime and Punishment, The Idiot, The Possessed, and The Brothers Karamazov . . . his swan song . . . which Freud called "the most magnificent novel ever written."

One of the most fortunate events of his life was meeting Anna Snitkina, a devoted, capable woman who became his stenographer and later his wife and publisher. When creditors became belligerent the two of them skipped off to Europe for four years, where they eked out a living made leaner by Dostoevsky's continuous gambling. But in his last years he enjoyed both fame and fortune, and when he died in 1881 he was given a public funeral. Although he once defined man as "the ungrateful biped," he was convinced of the basic goodness of the human race. This doctrine turns up in most of his novels, along with a contrasting negative one. His own life was a continual battle between good and evil, making him an appealing subject for a study such as John Grey has prepared.

gist. By measuring their responses to physical tests, Dr. Fletcher will guess which sports they take part in. Then, using the same approach of linking body type and function, he will construct the image of an athlete capable of a sixteen-foot pole-vault. The testing apparatus includes the photocardiograph, which shows heart beats of athletes under stress, the Harvard step test, and hand and back dynamometers.

Handel must have been likeable. When he was young the Italian nobility made a fuss of him. Then the German nobility. Then the English nobility. Queen Anne gave him a pension when he was very young, and later George I did likewise. He wasn't a smooth courtier. His manners were sometimes rough; he wasn't above swearing and shouting; he ate greedily. But there was something irresistible about him and his music.—

ROYAL COMPOSERS

The Prince lives outside Bremen and is a writer as well as a composer.

"Three unaccompanied troubador songs from the 12th and 13th centuries by Richard Coeur de Lion, Henry III, Duke of Brabant, and Thibaut IV, King of Navarre, will precede two works by Holy Roman Emperors, Leopold I and his son Joseph I. A pure and beautiful motet by John IV of Portugal will act as a bridge into a section that can be described as a kind of "headless gallery," as one of the composers was a murderer, while the others were all executed under the most grisly circumstances. The murderer was Gesualdo, Prince of Verosa. According to history Gesualdo murdered his unfaithful wife Donna Maria and her lover. In spite of this he married again and, as Philip Heseltine somewhat facetiously suggests, it is just possible his second wife murdered him! Whether this is true or not, the place where Gesualdo murdered his wife still exists, the story goes that after the Prince took refuge from his wife's relatives, the people nearby could hear an anguished cry at midnight as the white phantom of Donna Maria glided through the alleys surrounding the palace. Since those days the building has had a sinister reputation and a fairly recent collapse of one of the walls was attributed by the local peasants to a fatal curse which has rested on the palace for over 300 years. All this apart, Gesualdo is a composer of great importance in musical history, as he had a highly individual style and craftsmanship far in advance of his time. The other composers in this headless gallery are Queen Anne Boleyn, King Charles I of England, and Maria Antoinette, Queen of France.

"In contrast this music will be followed by some songs for chorus by Gustav, the Crown Prince of Sweden, who lived between 1827 and 1852. Prince Gustav, like members of other royal families, was a high-ranking officer in the army; but he received a university education and was interested in music all his life, so much so that the Swedish Academy of Music elected him as an honorary member in 1844. In addition to Anne Boleyn and Charles I a number of other English royal composers will have works included in the program. King Henry V, the victor of the Battle of Agincourt and immortalized by Shakespeare, has written, amongst other works, a Gloria which will be performed. Another famous and very musical king, Henry VIII, will be represented by a three-part song called Pastime with Good Company.

"Moving on to the 18th century, part of a Pastoral Cantata by Frederick Lewis, Prince of Wales, will be performed. Frederick Lewis was the father of George III and the man who backed the Italian composer Bononcini as opposed to Handel during the glittering day of the Italian opera in London. Another royal composer who did much to further the arts in England was Albert, the Prince Consort of Queen Victoria, and his chorale In Life's Gay Morning was sung by Jenny Lind at the wedding of the Prince of Wales—later Edward VII—to Alexandra of Denmark. Many years after the Prince Consort's death, Queen Victoria chose his Te Deum to be sung by a choir of 300 at St. Paul's Cathedral as part of the celebration of her Golden Jubilee. Following a song by Prince Albert, the broadcast will conclude with music by a number of contemporary royal composers, beginning with a song for voice and piano quintet by Albrecht, Prince of Hohenzollern. Prince Albrecht lives in a castle on the Rhine and spends a great deal of his time high some of the myths surrounding the campaign. For instance, I regret to say that the story about General Bougainville wasting valuable time dallying with a girl planted by the English is not true. In all, the campaign provides a rich fabric of material for a broadcast of this type."

Many Canadians perhaps will be surprised to know that this battle plays an important role in school history books of English-speaking Dominions other than Canada. For from the Quebec battle came the division of English-speaking and French-speaking Canada under one flag; from this came the famous Durham Report of 1839 recommending the union of the two Canadas and the granting of responsible government; and from this, finally, there grew the modern concept of Dominions within the one Commonwealth. For this reason, the conflict between General Wolfe and General Montcalm is learned by a great many schoolboys outside of Canada.

The Marquis de Montcalm Gezan de Saint Veran was born in France, near Nîmes, in 1712. "At 15 he entered the army," says Chambers' Encyclopedia, "and was severely wounded and made prisoner at the battle of Piacenza. In 1756 he assumed command of the French forces in Canada and soon after his arrival captured the British post at Oswego. The following summer he crossed Lake George with about 8,000 French and Indians and captured Fort William Henry. In 1758 General Abercromby advanced on Ticonderoga with 15,000 regular and provincial troops. The place was defended by Montcalm with a much smaller force of regular troops. The British forces displayed courage but after repeated attempts to force the defences they withdrew with the loss of about 2,000 men." After this successful defence Montcalm moved to Quebec and prepared to defend it against the British. He was, of course, mortally wounded in the Battle of the Plains of Abraham.

James Wolfe was born in a vicarage in Kent in 1727. "From the first," says Chambers, "he was bent upon following his father's profession of arms, and, balked by illness at 13 of a share in the unfortunate Cartagena expedition . . . in December, 1741, he obtained a second lieutenancy in the Regiment of Marines of which his father was colonel." The young Wolfe must then have been 14. At the age of 16 he was adjutant of his regiment at the battle of Dettingen; within a year he was made captain, then brigade-major . . . From 1749 to 1757 he was mainly engaged in garrison duty. His creditable part in the otherwise disgraceful Rochefort expedition of 1757 firmly established him in the eyes of Pitt and in 1758, with the full rank of colonel, he commanded a brigade in the expedition against Cape Breton. On February 17, 1759, aged 32, he sailed from England for the last time to command the British forces against Quebec. And like his gallant opponent, Montcalm, he died in the Battle for Quebec.

composing. Turning to another part of the world the Maharaja of Porbandar has turned out dozens of small rather naive pieces, one of which will be included. Last, but not least, on the list of royal composers is the King of Cambodia, who is more concerned with light music and jazz, and to conclude the program a small jazz group will improvise on themes by the King.

"To return to the opening of the program, I was in London recently at the recording of the Earl of Harewood's introduction for the broadcast. After the recording session was over the Earl expressed great interest in the broadcast and thought it remarkable that so much unusual music by royal composers had been brought to light. Not all the works are masterpieces, but most of them are entertaining and reflect the age in which they were written. The broadcast on September 16 is probably the first time in the history of radio that a major royal composers' program has been presented, and for this reason alone it should arouse the interest and curiosity of CBC Wednesday Night listeners."
